Bernhardt and Coquelin in "L'Alphonse" at English's Opera House.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has played in Indianapolis to larger audiences when she was the sole star of her traveling company

House last night, accompanied by the distinguished French actor, M. Benoit Constant. However, she has probably never faced a more brilliant or cultured audience in Indianapolis than on the occasion of her latest and shortest visit. Of course, the chief desire which actuated people in flocking in such numbers to Sara had borne the weight of her years, which by now amount to something like fifty-eight. All who obtained a clear view of the actress must have felt that she is truly a living marvel. Beyond a slight slender frame admirably fits her to portray the young Duke of Reichstadt, a curly blonde fur furnishing the proper air of youthfulness, that is not destroyed by little wrinkles or "crow's feet," the lines for which Mme. Bernhardt has always been noted has been little weakened by long years of use. It is still vibrant, thrilling and marvelously flexible. By it she is enabled to portray with clearness, even to those who do not understand the language she employs, all the varied emotions felt by the ill-starred Egle.

With matches are the great actress shows how the little joy allowed the unfortunate son of Napoleon was ever elated with sorrow. In the stronger scenes and situations Mme. Bernhardt's superb acting is most thoroughly realized and appreciated. The duke's vivid description of his father's grand army, evoked by sight of the mimic soldiers of France painted by the hand of the faithful Flambeau, was young man, full of unrealistic ambitions, imaginative to a degree beyond his fellow, and crushed by the terrible destruction of his father's house, the emperor's son, the duke's portrayal will be realized.

Without attempting the impossible task of describing the play, it is an unfamiliar tongue, it will suffice to say that the Bernhardt-Coquelin production of "L'Alphonse" has been the most successful of the season. The supporting company was of a surprisingly high standard of merit. Notably good work was done by M. Desjardins as Metterich, M. Scheer as the tailor, M. Deneubourg as Prokesh, M. Krauss as the French attache, M. Guille as General Hartman, M.
Duree as the Austrian Emperor, Mme.
Mesa as Maria Louise, widow of Napoleon and mother of the young Duke of Reichstadt, "The Eagle," M. Marcey as the Princess Camerata, Mlle. Damroff as Theresa, M. Kerwich as the Elsie, and M.
Mills as the princess.

Scenically the production was the most magnificent and complete that has been seen in this city. The great production of "Cyrano de Bergerac," the other great production of the season, was a masterpiece in the second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth acts were pictures that will haunt the memory of all who saw it. It was a masterpiece of scenic art, the scenery was all painted on this side by Homer Emons, the celebrated New York artist. He fairly outdid himself in the splendid view of the pa-lac at Schonbrun, illuminated and bedecked for a masquerade, and in the thrilling reproduction of the battle of Waterloo. In this latter scene the lightning effects were startling.

Notes of the Stage.

Next Monday the High Rollers will open at the Empire for three days, followed by Watson's American Burlesques.

Over the long-distance telephone, last night, the engagement of the Leique Concert Company, at English's, to-night, was canceled. The money for purchased seats will be refunded at the box office.

Ada Gray, the actress, is reported to be dying at a hospital in Fordham. For years she has taken the leading role in East Lynne, playing one night stands throughout the country. Miss Gray, the easy and robes, but without any pronounced success.

New animals are being received at the Zoo so rapidly that Press Agent Waddell is obliged to work "overtime" to think up stories for the newspapers about each one.

The programme given each night this week is proving uncommonly attractive to Zoo patrons.

The production of that pretty, old-fashioned, sympathetic play, "Human Hearts," at the Park Theater, the first half of the current week is a well-acted, well-realized play that many in the audience are moved to tears by the story so cleverly simulated on the stage.

The story of "East Lynne," by Mrs.

Henry Wood, is so well-known and so popular that its dramatization, attractively staged and presented by a capable company at the Park Theater, the last three days of the present week is a well-acted, well-

simulated on the stage.

When Grace Van Studdford, the former operatic prima donna, who is making the hit of the programme at the Grand this week, made her debut with the Metropolitan English Grand Opera Company, in New York, the critics of the metropolis characterized her as "the musical find of the year." It is a fact that no singer in the vaudeville possesses a voice of such rare quality as Miss Van Studdford's. Her equal has certainly not reached the Grand this far in the present season.

"Hodge, Podge & Co." is the title of the deliciously funny musical comedy in which

Peter F. Daley, Christie McDonald and their fifty-eight co-conspirators will appear at the Grand this week. The story of the current week, beginning to-morrow night, the piece is in three acts and admits of novel and picturesque scenery, which has been provided most lavishly by Manager Frank McKee. The local engagement includes a special matinee Saturday.

A number of important musical events of the present season still remain. Joseph S.

Baernstein, the eminent baritone, who scored such a remarkable triumph with the Amphion Club in the German House earlier in the season, is to be heard again with that organization May 3. The United States

Ensemble Band will give a single concert at the Grand this week. The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra and Victor Herbert's orchestra are also booked for concerts here, but dates have not been given out.

A NOTABLE WOMAN DEAD.

DEMISE OF MRS. ZERELDA G. WALL-ACE AT AN ADVANCED AGE.

Her Life Had Been Characterized by Great Intellectual Activity—Numerous Family Connections.

Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace, notable in Indiana and other States for her work, from a notable family, whose descendants, great in number, are among the most prominent residents of this State, died at 8 o'clock yesterday morning at the home of her daughter, at Catawba, near Spencer, Ind.
She was eighty-three years old. Her illness dated from Saturday, when she was taken with a slight cold. Sunday she was much better and Monday morning she felt no ill effects of the attack. A change for the worse came, however, and she was obliged to return to her bed, gradually growing weaker until death came. She was attended by her daughter, who was a nurse, and by her son, who was a doctor.
An announcement to relatives here was a great surprise, as her son, David Wallace, accompanied by Dr. Preston, went to Catawba Saturday, returning with the idea that her illness was not serious.

The funeral services will be held here tomorrow at 2 p. m. from the Central Christian church, of which Mrs. Wallace was one of the charter members about sixty years ago. The services will be conducted by Prof. A. R. Benton, of Butler College, who has for years conducted the funeral services of members of the family.Mrs. Wallace leaves two children of her own, David Wallace, president of the Indiana House and Mule Company, of this city, and Mrs. Agnes Steiner, of Catawba.

General Lewis Wallace is a stepson.
She also leaves a sister, Mrs. Jemima Gatling, wife of Dr. Richard Gatling, the inventor of the famous Gatling gun. Her sisters, one of whom became Mrs. David Beatty, another Mrs. John H. McKee, and the other Mrs. Robert B. Duncan, died many years ago. Judge James M. Leathers, Mrs. Arthur B. Grover and Mrs. William B. Cleveland, of this city, are grandchildren.

MRS. WALLACE'S LIFE.

She Was One of Indiana's Most Remarkable Women.

Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace was born at Millensburg, Boone county, Kentucky, Aug.

6, 1817. Her parents, Dr. John H. Sanders and Polly C. Gray, were both Kentuckians, the former of South Carolina and the latter of Virginia descent. Her maternal grandmother was a Singleton, of Virginia, a beauty and an heiress. It is said that when her grandmother married her grandfather he put his worldly goods on one pony and the other on the other, and he was as light as the breeze. There was in her Kentucky that Zerelda Sanders passed her childhood, learning and practicing such household arts as were incumbent on the eldest of five daughters. Her first instruction was on a shingle, on which were pasted the letters taken from Webster's spelling book. Before her ninth year she began to study Murray's Grammar, Who-pse's Compendium, General History, Arithmetic and Geography and an old English reader. At the age of eleven the child was put into a boarding school at Ver-sailles, where she remained two years.

Dr. Sanders removed into Indiana in 1830, when Zerelda was thirteen. Indiana was a "new country," and Dr. Sanders bought a homestead in Indianapolis. Here the daugh-ter Zerelda went to school for six months to a boarding school, and then to the last school she attended, and all the spare time the daughter had was spent in reading.
When she was fifteen she was married to her husband, and it became his habit, when he had any serious cases, to take Zerelda with him on his visits to his patients. Zerelda became interested in medicine and read books on physiology, anatomy and hygiene.
Her husband continued to read, and she was rigidly particular in her views on health. She was so much with her husband that she was called "the doctor's wife." In the latter part of her life she should be acquainted with his friends, most prominent in public affairs and lit-erature. Zerelda Wallace, by her piety in later years of some of the books she read when she was a young girl. These books were "The Pilgrim's Progress," "The History of the World," "The History of England," "Robertson's History of Scotland" and "History of Charles V."

MARIED LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

In 1836, following her nineteenth year, Zerelda G. Sanders and David Wallace, the lieutenant governor of the State, were mar-ried. Mr. Wallace was eighteen years older than his bride, and had three children, one of whom was William Wallace, who died in this city a few years ago, during his term as postmaster; another Gen. Lew Wallace, author of "Ben-Hur." She came into that household of motherless children peculiarly fitted for the difficult duties before her, being judicious, wise and sympathetic, and at the same time strong and steadfast. It is difficult to praise that which is so good, upon her when it is said that her stepchildren became deeply attached to her and that a mutual affection grew up between bestow upon a parent. She has been revered and beloved by all who knew her, and her memory is a source of comfort to her children and her grandchildren.
